1. When it became apparent in Geneva that, among the East-West experts charged with studying the means for controlling nuclear disarmament, Czechoslovakia, rather than Poland, had been selected to sit at the side of the Soviet Union, one of the Polish delegates at the Geneva conference remarked that this could cost Minister Juliusz Katz-Suchy very dearly.

25X1

After a rather stormy interview with two important Polish delegates, Katz-Suchy left Geneva abruptly on the evening of 20 August 1955.

2. Numerous conversations among Satellite delegates confirmed the impression that Poland's failure to obtain a seat next to the USSR, an honor for which strenuous efforts had been made, was considered a serious matter.
